TBS 6284 PCI-E DVB-T2 QUAD TUNER TV CARD

A couple of months ago we reviewed a unique quad DVB-S2 tuner card. Here's its HD-ready terrestrial sibling

THE OPPOSITION

Black Gold BGT3620

Two DVB-T2 tuners plus analogue video and cable. BDA drivers and Windows compatible but juddery performance on test PC.

PCTV nanoStick T2 290e

Cheaper, but only one tuner. Connects to a USB port, so no need to take apart desktop PCs, either

WE'VE CERTAINLY come a long way since the earliest days of digital terrestrial TV reception on PCs.

And yet not so long ago the idea of getting this new-fangled digital TV malarkey on your desktop, generally with a mammoth PCI card full of 'chippery', was quite a novel one. With the supplied software you could also record programmes onto your PC's hard disc – thereby effectively converting it into a PVR at a time when these were not commonplace items.

Now the average modern PC has a hard disc measured in terabytes. And there are a lot more digital terrestrial channels to choose from, a handful of which are broadcast in high definition.

Build and connectivity

To make the most of this we have the unique TBS 6284 – a card with no fewer than four terrestrial tuners on board. That means you can record three (or more) channels while viewing a fourth. Better still, all four tuners are compatible with not only the established DVB-T standard but also the newer DVB-T2 technology that carries HD channels. Like its satellite equivalent, the TBS 6984, it takes the form of a PCI-Express x1 card. Most PCs made over the past

INTERFACE

Scanning in progress with TBSViewer. Other software has much the same functionality including the ability to make recordings

Windows Media Center has a slick easy-to-use digital TV application but other software offers more, such as transport stream recording

BBC One HD – as viewed using the included DVBdream. Note the high load presented to our Yoyotech PC's CPU by this application
